De Porceleyne Fles (Royal Delft)

The beautiful Delftware shown in this catalog was produced by the De Porceleyne Fles (The Porcelain Jar) Company founded in 1635. Of the dozens of original 17th century pottery makers, the only Dutch delftware pottery still in continuous operation is De Porceleyne Fles.

Early techniques involved firing brownish earthenware which was then covered with a white enamel, decorations were added, then a second firing sealed the finish. This produced an attractive, usable but somewhat brittle product.

In the 19th century, new clay mixtures and techniques developed by De Porceleyne Fles improved delftware so that it was able to compete with the porcelain from new factories in Germany and England.

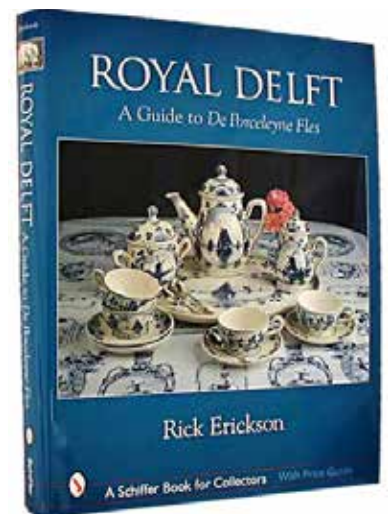

It took decades to develop the best combination of body, color, glazes, kilns and firing methods. And most importantly, to form a team of highly skilled artists capable of making the special decorations under difficult conditions.

De Porceleyne Fles pieces exemplify artistry and craftsmanship that has been refined for centuries. When purchased for your home, they will be treasured heirlooms that provide daily pleasure.

This mark plus the artist's initials, item number, and date code is on each piece of De Porceleyne Fles.
